At Seowmoo Terrace, on the 10th inst., the wife of Captain BARNES, of the Douglas steamer TACOMA, of a son.

The N. P. steamer Tacoma left Tacoma for this port on Sunday, the 8th inst.

The Steaming Company Ltd. will hold its first concert of the season on Saturday evening next.

Count Oishi, Italian Chargé d'Affaires in Tokyo, has been promoted to the rank of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

H.M.S. Mercury arrived here yesterday from Saigon, the German corvette Arcona arrived from Amoy, and the French gunboat Lefebvre left for Amoy.

At the Police Court yesterday four keepers of common lodging houses were each fined $25 for overcrowding their premises. For injecting morphine a man was fined $50.

The Peking and Tientsin Times hear that the boundaries of the German Concession at Tientsin are now arranged, and that the work of laying out roads will shortly be commenced.

The O. & O. steamer Copie, with mails, Sea, from San Francisco to the 21st ult. via Honoluli, arrived at Yokohama, and will leave for this port on the morning of the 13th inst. via Nagasaki.

The P. & O. mail steamer Lefebvre left Shanghai on the 4th inst. for Amoy, with the incoming English mail, and may be expected to arrive here about noon or Monday next, the 18th inst.

All efforts to raise the Tien-tsin have proved unsuccessful. Two of the large guns have been recovered, however, together with a considerable quantity of apparatus, and will shortly be brought to Kure from Weihai.

In an action brought by Henry Clare before Judge Mowat at Yokohama against the Northern Pacific S.S. Co., for damages sustained by the falling down of an open railway on the Victoria, the latter has been awarded the sum claimed, $15,000, and costs.

Professor Whitney will appear in Lumiere's electric lanterns and camera photographs at the Theatre Royal to-morrow evening. All who heard him at the Mount Austin Hotel on Saturday evening were well pleased with his entertainment and his performance to-morrow will no doubt attract a large audience.

The last is rather vague suggestion, the mere admiration of a representative assembly, but the idea is there, and shows that in the minds of this thousand scholars some notion of legislation by representatives of the people is smoldering. The fact is hopeful, possibly promising, but it would be idle for the friends of China to build much upon such an evidence of life in the dry rot of the body politic. Patriotism of a very conservative type is at the bottom of the memorial. The desire to see the disgrace inflicted upon the nation by the valour and ability of Japan wiped out by the moving spring that has impelled these Chinese to so far abandon all their traditions and to secure their prejudices as to advocate the adoption of a programme that we may readily believe conflicts with some of their most carefully cherished beliefs and that it carried into effect would smother their dearest illusions to pieces for ever. The dislike of the foreigner is patent through the memorial; the proposed adoption of so many institutions of foreign origin in novices modifies the spirit of antagonism against the Western people. Foreigners are alluded to as "the barbarous nations" and "the barbarians," and it is suggested that with the aid of Confucianism they would be able to civilise the barbarians. There is thus, it will be seen, little appreciation of the source from whence the reforms proposed are to be drawn. The educated Chinese—that is to say, the Chinese who are saturated with the lore of their sages, and especially of Confucius—can see nothing to admire in the learning of Western countries, and only under the dire pressure of necessity can be brought to recognise the policy of acquiring the scientific knowledge unadmittedly possessed by the foreigner. From the attitude of their own fancied mental superiority the Chinese look down with supercilious contempt upon those outside barbarians who are uninitiated in their classics, and have had the misfortune to belong to "another nation." Of course there is a comical side to this domestic conceit, but the serious side is the impassable wall of separation it has been built up between the Chinese and foreigners.

It is to be feared that any step in the direction of progress and reform likely to be initiated will be terribly handicapped by this peculiar illusion held by the Chinese literati, and which is more or less an article of faith among the mass of the people of the immense superiority of China over all other lands and of the Chinese over all other peoples. If for a moment, moved thereby by an overpowering sense of the danger to which China is exposed by her weakness, the ruling class consent to the introduction of reforms and improvements there is always the danger of an almost immediate reaction. No sooner has an Imperial Decree been issued authorising the survey for a railway or the construction of a section of the proposed line, than some Censor or influential official is sure to launch a spirited memorial directed against it. For instance, although the Emperor and his Council are for the moment favourable to the extension of railways in various parts of the Empire, Li Ping-ho, the Governor of Shantung, an influential man renowned for the purity of his administration, rushes into the breach with a petition against the innovation, strongly worded and argued out that it is alleged to have produced a sudden and rapid cooling of the enthusiasm of Peking officials in the matter, and may have a retarding effect upon the progress of railway construction. His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor KWANG SU, who is said to have been favourable at one time to outpoken language on the part of officials, has lately shown great and marked intolerance of criticism of the acts of the Imperial family, and has banished two of the Vice-Presidents of the Board of Civil Appointments and Revenue respectively for the use of what he terms disparaging language when referring to the conduct of the Empress Dowager. The Censors are in theory encouraged to denounce abuses or to criticise any policy which may seem to them opposed to the interests of the state, but as a matter of fact their liberty to speak out soon ceases if they fall foul of any member of the Imperial family or of any potential Minister. The present administration consists of a number of colossal shams, and it is to be feared that all schemes of reform, no matter how promising, are really at bottom more or less wanting in honesty and reality.

Professor Whitney will appear in Lumiere's electric lanterns and camera photographs at the Theatre Royal to-morrow evening. All who heard him at the Mount Austin Hotel on Saturday evening were well pleased with his entertainment and his performance to-morrow will no doubt attract a large audience.

The last is rather vague suggestion, the mere admiration of a representative assembly, but the idea is there, and shows that in the minds of this thousand scholars some notion of legislation by representatives of the people is smoldering. The fact is hopeful, possibly promising, but it would be idle for the friends of China to build much upon such an evidence of life in the dry rot of the body politic. Patriotism of a very conservative type is at the bottom of the memorial. The desire to see the disgrace inflicted upon the nation by the valour and ability of Japan wiped out by the moving spring that has impelled these Chinese to so far abandon all their traditions and to secure their prejudices as to advocate the adoption of a programme that we may readily believe conflicts with some of their most carefully cherished beliefs and that it carried into effect would smother their dearest illusions to pieces for ever. The dislike of the foreigner is patent through the memorial; the proposed adoption of so many institutions of foreign origin in novices modifies the spirit of antagonism against the Western people. Foreigners are alluded to as "the barbarous nations" and "the barbarians," and it is suggested that with the aid of Confucianism they would be able to civilise the barbarians. There is thus, it will be seen, little appreciation of the source from whence the reforms proposed are to be drawn. The educated Chinese—that is to say, the Chinese who are saturated with the lore of their sages, and especially of Confucius—can see nothing to admire in the learning of Western countries, and only under the dire pressure of necessity can be brought to recognise the policy of acquiring the scientific knowledge unadmittedly possessed by the foreigner. From the attitude of their own fancied mental superiority the Chinese look down with supercilious contempt upon those outside barbarians who are uninitiated in their classics, and have had the misfortune to belong to "another nation." Of course there is a comical side to this domestic conceit, but the serious side is the impassable wall of separation it has been built up between the Chinese and foreigners.

Of course there is a comical side to this domestic conceit, but the serious side is the impassable wall of separation it has been built up between the Chinese and foreigners.

It is to be feared that any step in the direction of progress and reform likely to be initiated will be terribly handicapped by this peculiar illusion held by the Chinese literati, and which is more or less an article of faith among the mass of the people of the immense superiority of China over all other lands and of the Chinese over all other peoples. If for a moment, moved thereby by an overpowering sense of the danger to which China is exposed by her weakness, the ruling class consent to the introduction of reforms and improvements there is always the danger of an almost immediate reaction. No sooner has an Imperial Decree been issued authorising the survey for a railway or the construction of a section of the proposed line, than some Censor or influential official is sure to launch a spirited memorial directed against it. For instance, although the Emperor and his Council are for the moment favourable to the extension of railways in various parts of the Empire, Li Ping-ho, the Governor of Shantung, an influential man renowned for the purity of his administration, rushes into the breach with a petition against the innovation, strongly worded and argued out that it is alleged to have produced a sudden and rapid cooling of the enthusiasm of Peking officials in the matter, and may have a retarding effect upon the progress of railway construction. His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor KWANG SU, who is said to have been favourable at one time to outpoken language on the part of officials, has lately shown great and marked intolerance of criticism of the acts of the Imperial family, and has banished two of the Vice-Presidents of the Board of Civil Appointments and Revenue respectively for the use of what he terms disparaging language when referring to the conduct of the Empress Dowager. The Censors are in theory encouraged to denounce abuses or to criticise any policy which may seem to them opposed to the interests of the state, but as a matter of fact their liberty to speak out soon ceases if they fall foul of any member of the Imperial family or of any potential Minister. The present administration consists of a number of colossal shams, and it is to be feared that all schemes of reform, no matter how promising, are really at bottom more or less wanting in honesty and reality.
